UP FRONT

I remember when THE X-MEN was an early Marvel title — mostly an also-ran but for a brief string of issues drawn by Neal Adams and Barry Smith. I was serving a stint in the Marvel Bullpen when X-MEN was re-launched, and even copy-edited some of the early Chris Claremont issues at the time.

Now it's a hot and heavy property that is at long last about to reach TV and, from there, enter the popular vernacular and perhaps earn the wider recognition of, say, Superman and Batman — or even the Hulk.

I also remember first discovering and reading THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS — then going on to meet the creators and ending up actually publishing the comic book. The series might have been an independent also-ran, but for the engaging, lite-and-lively scripting of Henry Vogel and —later — the noteworthy art of Mark Propst and Willie Peppers, among others.

Now the Knights are back, in a captivating crossover with the Hero Comics characters — and even here a certain karma is at work, for it so happens I contributed THE CHAMPIONS (as a name) to Marvel, and now years later have lived to see a group called by that name cross over with the Southern Knights.

Will the day come when the Knights ride a tide of comics popularity — when the characters are on TV or in movies, and the group is well-known to the public?

It could happen. I've seen other unlikely — or should I say uncanny — events come to pass.

-David

#1 SUPER TEAM OF THE SOUTH!

Dragon! Electrode! Connie Ronin! Kristin Austin! Aramis Merrow! They're the Southern Knights.

It's been a rough and rocky road for Hero Comics since we last spoke to Dennis Mallonee back in CI #64, with the whole thing going on hold for a while due to financial difficulties. But that's hardly an unusual occurrence for an independent comics publisher these days. What is heartening is that Dennis never gave up, and is coming back with a vengeance. More stories of FLARE and the LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS family of characters (including Roy and Dann Thomas's CAPTAIN THUNDER AND BLUE BOLT) are being produced, and mine own SPARKPLUG mini-series will be out from Hero in August.

But the big news from Hero — and from Comics Interview Group — is a multi-part cross-company crossover between Dennis's LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS heroes and CI's own SOUTHERN KNIGHTS. So let's cut to the chase, now, and see just what Dennis has in mind . . .

LOU MOUGIN: Tell me about the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS/LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS/FLARE crossover.

DENNIS MALLONEE: That's a long story, but I suppose it began at the Capital sales conference three or four years ago. David Anthony Kraft and I have been on fairly good terms for quite some time and we got together with Henry Vogel and talked about what we could do to work together. That's when the idea for the crossover between THE CHAMPIONS and THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS was suggested. I don't remember who suggested it — but it seemed like a good idea. These groups structurally have a lot in common; not only how the teams were formed, but also in the fact that they both operate in similar type worlds. There's not a huge number of super-powered people hanging around in their worlds. Both backgrounds are magical and supernatural in nature. You couldn't do this type of crossover logically with a lot of other books. The Champions couldn't cross over with, say, the Avengers or the Justice League, because their worlds are so different

THE LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS™

LOU: Is this going to be a trans-dimensional crossover, or are the Southern Knights and the Champions going to live in the same world?

DENNIS: The working premise is that — as far as this story is concerned — the Champions and the Southern Knights operate in the same world. The story involves a time machine and magic, along with crossing over into alternate realities and such, so we did leave ourselves an out. If, down the road, we have to change things, we can always say that they're not of the same world, but rather that it was an effect from messing with time.

LOU: Who are some of the other creators involved? Who's scripting what part?

DENNIS: If all goes as planned, I will be scripting all of the crossover. Henry Vogel and I worked out a plot for it. Henry also provided a lot of dialogue in the course of the plots. It seemed better for us to have one writer do the final dialog for the entire thing; which doesn't mean that Henry won't have input. We want to make sure that Henry's characters have the proper voice, so he will be reviewing the dialogue to make sure that Southern Knights aren't saying or doing anything out of character.

LOU: This sounds to me like Southern Knights will be getting back into publication following the crossover?

DENNIS: That's the hope. That's one of the reasons I wanted to do this — because I've been such a big SOUTHERN KNIGHTS fan for so long.

LOU: Tell me a little more about the creative teams on the book.

DENNIS: There will be eight chapters in the series and four of the chapters will appear in the LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS, two in THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS, and the remaining two in FLARE. Linking all eight of those chapters, with me doing the scripting, will be Mark Propst doing the finished artwork, after the opening by George Perez.

Looking at the rest of the creative team, chapter one is done by Howard Simpson. Chapter two will be done by Lou Manna; Lou is the regular ICICLE artist. Chapter three will be done by Howard Bender; Howard has been doing some backup features for our FLARE reprint specials. Howard is also scheduled to be the regular artist on the FLARE first-edition series which will cover Flare as a teenager growing up in

FLARE

"There'll be eight chapters, four in CHAMPIONS, two

South America. Chapter four is being pencilled by Scott Clark, who is the regular artist for SPARKPLUG — which you know all about, since that is your book!

LOU: Right! Buy that one, too, folks! (Laughter.)

DENNIS: Gordon Purcell will be working on issue five; Gordon is tentatively scheduled because DC gave him more work than expected since they are going to take the STAR TREK book bi-weekly in the summer. Issue six will also be pencilled by Mark Propst, the regular FLARE artist; Mark also pencilled and/or inked a superb string of SOUTHERN KNIGHTS issues, way back when.

LOU: We pretty much know who the guys in the white hats are going to be in the crossover; who will the guys in the black hats be?

DENNIS: The villain for the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS will be Morrigan, the goddess who has fought the Knights in the past. She basically gets her hands on a time machine, enabling her to go into the past to gain more followers for the present. The Champions get involved because Rose's family has always been in opposition to Morrigan's religion. When Rose finds out that Morrigan is going after the time machine that the Southern Knights have, Rose gets herself and the Champions involved. There's also the secondary villain, Dread, from the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS. Dread has the power to evoke emotions in other people. From the Champions side we'll be dealing with a couple of Flare villains. Thugmaster and Darkon are the two main villains. Darkon only shows up in the first issue or so. The Thugmaster isn't evil in the true sense of the word; the Thugmaster is a trader in information; he provides personnel services for people that can afford to pay for it. Morrigan is trying to find out where the heck the time machine is and she can't do it on her own. Thugmaster provides her with the information that the time machine is in the basement of the Southern Knights' mansion. Since that was the most logical place to look and Morrigan couldn't figure it out, she gets annoyed and uses Electrode, Connie Ronnin, and Icestar caught in a 20th-century world that's very different from the one they know.

in SOUTHERN KNIGHTS and two in FLARE."

her powers to humiliate the Thugmaster. At that point, Thugmaster becomes concerned because his information is that Morrigan is powerless — and that obviously isn't the case. Since the Thugmaster now has useful information concerning Morrigan, he peddles that information to the League of Champions by phoning up Flare and asking what they're willing to pay. Not knowing if the Champions are enough to handle Morrigan, he goes down to Atlanta to check out the Southern Knights. He busts Dread out of jail to have him go against the Knights to see how strong they are. The first two issues take place simultaneously — which is why the Champions couldn't get hold of the Southern Knights in the first place; the Knights are busy out fighting Dread and the Thugmaster's forces. What happens during all this is that Morrigan breaks into the Knights' basement to get at the time machine; the Champions break in at about the same time the Knights return home; and a fight ensues. Morrigan panics and has Darkon activate the time machine which sends most of the Champions on a journey through time and space to other worlds. Because Darkon is standing at the center of the effect, he gets blown to smithereens and is scattered through time. We'll be dealing with this in an issue of FLARE, a little bit down the road. Morrigan and Rose are not affected by the time machine going off. Rose's power involves the power to travel through dimensions — if she doesn't want to go then she's not going anywhere. Rose obviously didn't want to leave Morrigan alone with the time machine so she stays there. Morrigan doesn't notice Rose and figures everyone is gone and that she has won; Rose taps her on the shoulder, Morrigan turns around, and Rose decks her. Rose then uses the time machine to try and rescue the heroes.

Marksman, Aramis Merrow, and Kristin Austin trapped in a world of the 21st century that will seem awfully familiar to fans who have read the adventures of Eternity Smith.

"There are so many good possibilities for crossovers."

LOU: When is the series scheduled to come out?

DENNIS: One of the things I want to discuss is the distribution end of the comics. Whenever FLARE is given adequate display at the retail level, FLARE invariably produces more dollar revenue than ninety percent of the Marvel or DC books. Say CAPTAIN AMERICA sells for $1.25 and FLARE sells for $3.95, the question arises — which book is selling better? The usual

"Champions & Southern Knights are in the same world."

THE ANSWER IS THAT TIME HAS BEEN KNOCKED ASKEW. WE SAW IT HAPPEN LAST MONTH, AS THE LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS AND THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS FOUGHT TO PREVENT THE GODDESS MORRIGAN FROM GAINING CONTROL OF HER OWN PAST. THEY SUCCEEDED IN THAT, BUT SOMETHING WENT WRONG. NOW ICESTAR OF THE CHAMPIONS, AND ELECTRODE AND CONNIE RONIN OF THE KNIGHTS FIND THEMSELVES STANDING TOGETHER AS ALL OTHERS, MORRIGAN INCLUDED, SEEM TO VANISH ABOUT THEM.

answer from the retail standpoint is, of course, CAPTAIN AMERICA is selling better because it is a Marvel comic, and Marvel comics sell better than comics from other publishers. And that's usually as far as the analysis goes. Whether it's true or not is irrelevant, because that is what's perceived out there. Retailers and distributors believe that Marvel comics outsell comics from other publishers even if it isn't true.

LOU: But the dollar value they're taking in from FLARE is equal to, say CAPTAIN AMERICA?

DENNIS: Exceeds! The dollar volume for retailers that actually carry FLARE exceeds ninety percent of the product produced by Marvel or DC. This is not true in general, because clearly half of the retailers won't carry anything that isn't published by Marvel or DC. A good chunk of the retailers that do carry products other than Marvel or DC only carry a small chunk, and then they put it in the back of the store somewhere. The psychology I have to deal with is that retailers don't undestand that comics by Marvel or DC do not sell any better than good comics produced by other publishers.

LOU: I guess, in defense of the retailers, I have to say that there is a glut of independent publishers . . .

DENNIS: You'll have to give me examples to justify that statement, because the real glut is coming from Marvel; the glut is coming from DC. Anyway, the point of all this is that the reason we're crossing over with the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS/LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS/FLARE is to give retailers who have not been carrying our titles a real excuse to carry our material — so that they can see just how well our product sells. Let me give you an anecdote based on an event here in Santa Monica: One of our artists went into a local comics shop to pick up the sixth issue of FLARE the day it went on sale, and someone beat him to the last remaining copy. He went to the counter and asked the clerk if they were going to get any more in; he was told it wasn't very likely, because it didn't sell very well. Here's a store that sold out all ten copies in a matter of a few hours — and then they say it doesn't sell very well? When pressed on the matter, the clerk said it doesn't sell well, because it isn't a Marvel comic. My theory when we first started doing comics was that — if we did a comic that sold well — we would start getting orders. That has turned out not to be true. If you're producing a good product that sells and you can't get people to carry it, what's the answer? I don't know the answer.

LOU: I guess that's where marketing comes in.

DENNIS: Well, yes, there's marketing and then there's unethical marketing. To a large extent, in my mind, the double covers, bagged issues, card inserts — all that stuff — is borderline unethical.

LOU: I'd also say it is a marketing tool,

Flare, Icicle, and Dragon working together to find a way to escape from the 18th century.

"I've just read the entire run of SOUTHERN

HENRY VOGEL

Henry Vogel is the co-creator/writer of X-THIEVES and SOUTHERN KNIGHTS, the latter of which is coming out of hiatus soon as host to a crossover with LEAGUE OF CHAMPIONS and FLARE. After talking with Dennis Mallonee, I decided to hunt up Henry and get his half of the story. So here it is . . .

LOU MOUGIN: What are your expectations concerning the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS/CHAMPIONS/FLARE crossover?

HENRY: Oh, I don't know — to sell a million copies? It's tough to say, the market being the way it is. We're talking a wait-and-see attitude. If the response is good for THE KNIGHTS, we could bring them out of hiatus.

LOU: The Christmas issue was the last issue of THE KNIGHTS?

HENRY: Correct.

LOU: And X-THIEVES?

HENRY: It's been a while since we've had an issue of X-THIEVES — but we're talking about quite a few things planned for them.

LOU: I've just finished reading the entire run of THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS and it really was a well-written book. What was the reason for the book going on hiatus?

HENRY: For one thing, the market for black-and-white comics has gone to hell. I needed a break, also, since I had started a new job that was more mentally demanding than my previous job. I was less able to come home from my job and spend three more hours writing every night.

LOU: The writing has been consistently strong during your run on the book and particularly well-handled were the characterizations. The quality was always consistently high.

HENRY: Thank you!

LOU: Has the crossover given you new ideas for future works?

HENRY: Sure, plenty of ideas — although nothing concrete. There are a few avenues that I'd like to explore. I do have some ideas for a storyline I call "Psychic Wars," but I don't want to go into too many details on that right now.

LOU: If the book does come back as a regular series, will it be as a black-and-white or maybe as a color title?

HENRY: Barring a financial miracle, I would have to say that the book would come back as a black-and-white.

LOU: Any chance of seeing the awesome assassins, Carl and Larry, in this crossover?

HENRY: Not in this crossover — although we have speculated about bringing them back in a little mini-series. If THE SOUTHERN KNIGHTS get going again, then they probably will show up somewhere!

because they're in the business to sell as many comics as they can.

DENNIS: Marvel, and I'll say this bluntly, Marvel is not in the business of selling comic books. Marvel is in the business of pushing itself trying to increase market share. If Marvel's concern were to sell good comics they would not be doing multiple covers.

LOU: DC is also doing the same thing.

DENNIS: DC was forced into doing it because they have to compete on the same level as Marvel.

LOU: What about the #0 cover gimmick — I guess you'd put that in the same category?

DENNIS: That is much more towards a more reasonable marketing tool.

LOU: It puts me in mind of Valiant, so if you're criticizing people for doing marketing gimmicks . . .

DENNIS: I wouldn't criticize anyone who is struggling for market share, if you're trying to get to the point which you should be at . . . and that's what Valiant is trying to do. I don't have a problem with that. You have to do things to get your product into the store. What bugs me is the kind of thing that Marvel has done. You have a product that you know is going to sell, but you do something specifically to get retailers to buy more copies than they can reasonably expect to sell. We had what — eight million copies of X-MEN #1 in its various forms? — and two weeks later they were showing up in the fifty-cent boxes at comic conventions. You're looking at maybe six and a half million of those copies that never sold to the consumer! That kind of marketing approach is unethical — because you're not trying to sell product, you're trying to foist it off on your middle man!

LOU: I think in the long run that type of stuff will prove to be counter-productive.

DENNIS: It's already counter-productive. What I'm saying is that marketing is ethical if it puts value-per-dollar in the hands of the people. Marvel didn't accomplish that with its multiple covers. The #0 issue that Valiant did is reasonable, because it did put a value per dollar into the hands of the people. The method they used forcing people to get eight issues to get the one thing they really want is borderline — because there may be people that didn't want some of that stuff. Our major problem is not getting the book to sell. Once it's out there, it sells! We have to find a way to persuade retailers to carry the thing. Our marketing for May through September is going to be a bonus pack. With a minimum order of ten copies of any of our titles — and your SPARKPLUG book is included, Lou — we'll give five extra copies free. I think that is the most ethical approach one can take in marketing, because you're actually giving something of value to the retailer, in exchange for a commitment from the retailer to carry the book. That approach makes us feel good about the marketing approach we're taking along with getting something into the stores that, once the fans see it, they'll want it.

LOU: If the SOUTHERN KNIGHTS/CHAMPIONS/FLARE crossover works, is there a possibility of crossovers with other independent titles? I'm thinking of other groups such as Elementals, Hero Alliance, and Justice Machine — to name just a few.

DENNIS: Sure, I would be open to doing that. We little guys have to scratch each other's backs. We have spoken with Henry Vogel with the possibility of crossing over the X-THIEVES. Since we're dealing with teams, the idea would be to team X-THIEVES with ICICLE. Sort of a side thing, maybe even with Crissy Claus. Think about it, Crissy being Santa Claus's granddaughter, she can get into any house she wants without being seen. This would be perfect if you're a thief; just don't let Crissy know what you're doing. There are so many good possibilities for crossover ideas!

WILL MEUGNIOT

Will Meugniot is no stranger to the comics world and is best remembered for his artwork on DNAGENTS. Will also worked for a period of time for Marvel Comics and pencilled the Tigra series. Currently, Will is working in animation, where he has compiled an impressive string of credits producing a number of animated series. Comics fans are about to be re-introduced to the name of Will Meugniot as he is the Supervising Producer on the new X-MEN animated series that premieres on Fox this fall . . .

CHARLES S. NOVINSKIE: To start with something basic, tell us a little about where you work, Will.

WILL MEUGNIOT: I am supervising producer for a company by the name of GRAZ Entertainment, which is located in North Hollywood, the heart of the animation industry.

CHARLES: I'll be speaking with Larry Houston a little bit later. Larry is the line producer of the series. What exactly are the duties of supervising and line producers?

WILL: In this instance, my function on the show is that of a consultant, because of my comics experience. Larry is doing all of the prep work on the show. Larry is the one that hands out the storyboards and edits them, whereas I handle the political problems that might arise from doing X-MEN. X-MEN is a very complicated show with lots of different groups of people involved. I also help edit scripts, edit models, and assist in color shoices, a variety of jobs.

CHARLES: What company will be handling the actual animation?

WILL: The animation is going to a studio in Korea by the name of Akom. They're also doing some episodes of BATMAN and in the past they've worked on shows such as ROBOCOP and TINY TOONS. They're a very large company and any half-hour animated show produced, they end up doing some of it.

CHARLES: Basically, your involvement and that of GRAZ Entertainment is the pre-production of the series?

WILL: Exactly. We're responsible for the storyboards, model sheets and exposure sheets. The company that actually has the contract for the production of the series is Saban Entertainment. They're the ones that actually contracted the writers on the show. Saban is the studio on record for doing the series and we're subcontracted by them.

CHARLES: How is the animation being handled? Will it be done with individual cels or will the animation be computer generated?

VITAL STATISTICS

Name: Will Meugniot
Born: 24 July 1951 — Everret, WA
Interests: Japanese comics and animation
Wife: Jo Meugniot (colorist for Disney)
Current projects: 3-issue mini-series from Fantagraphics, EXOTIC FANTASY, with never-before-seen sketchbook material.

"Let's fac[illegible]EN is just about the Wolverine.

WILL: The bulk of the show will be conventional cel animation. There is some discussion that there will be some computer work done on it — but we have a very bad time problem with production because it was picked up very late. There are some things we're talking about doing but there might not be enough time to get it into production.

CHARLES: The X-MEN animated series is something we've heard about for years now. How did it eventually come about and, more importantly, how did it end up at Fox?

WILL: A lot of it came about because of Margaret Loesch, who is Fox Children's President.

CHARLES: And who was, at one time, the president of Marvel Production.

WILL: Exactly. She was there when they were doing MUPPET BABIES. She was at Marvel when we produced the original X-MEN pilot, also. Margaret has always been a very strong advocate for the program, but business deals always kept the show down. It was scheduled to go three or four times over as many years and something always came up. Let's face it, X-MEN is about the best-selling property in the world right now. Margaret basically said that, if someone could straighten out the business end of it, she'd guarantee the show a time slot. When all was said and done Saban came up with a business proposal that won Marvel's heart.

CHARLES: It should be interesting to see what time slot a show such as X-MEN will be given. I would guess that the audience is going to be more diverse than the average Saturday morning cartoon viewers.

WILL: The tentative slot is 11 a.m. Saturday morning and the show is scheduled to appear in mid-October. The placement of the show at 11 a.m. by Fox is very intentional. We're leading into the SUPER DAVE show, so the intention there is to have the show lead into their adult programming.

CHARLES: How many episodes are scheduled for this year?

WILL: Thirteen half-hour shows.

CHARLES: With so many X-Men around, old, new, and splinter groups such as X-Force and X-Factor, who will be in the series?

WILL: Our core group will be composed of Professor X, Jean Grey, Cyclops, Rogue, Storm, Gambit, Jubilee and, of course, Wolverine.

CHARLES: No Beast or Iceman?

WILL: Well, yes, they're not what we call core members — but the Beast is best-selling property in t ght now."

involved for two episodes and will be a recurring character throughout the series. Archangel will also be making an appearance, along with Cable.

CHARLES: You mention Cable; will we be seeing crossovers with other groups such as X-Force?

WILL: No, not really. The series is just X-MEN. The problem with the series is exactly that — the X-Men mythos is so dense that there is so much material available. There's a lot to do over the first thirteen episodes; who are the X-Men and why, that sort of stuff. Any time we introduce a villain, we have to do a back story on him.

CHARLES: Can you give us a few examples of what we can see during the course of the first season — sort of an episode-by-episode rundown?

WILL: Sure. During the first two episodes we introduce the Sentinels and the Sentinel universe. That background information will lead up to Genosha.

CHARLES: So the series will tie in to relatively current events in the Marvel comics?

WILL: Pretty much so. The frustrating thing about it is that we have to assume that most of the audience doesn't know the history of the X-Men. The first thirteen episodes are sort of the pastiche. It's like the quick-read version of what's gone on in the comic for the past ten years.

CHARLES: Good luck! (Laughter.)

WILL: Well, yeah, it has been quite a challenge. We take quite a bit for granted, having read the material ourselves. Oddly enough, the person that has been our harshest critic — making sure that the uninitiated can keep up with the series — is Stan Lee. We're working hard to make sure that the show is easily accessible to the commoner.

CHARLES: Are any of the writers on the series also comics writers?

WILL: Don Glut wrote one episode for us. I think comics fans will be familiar with his name.

CHARLES: I've wondered what Don was up to; it's been years since he's done any comics work.

WILL: Well, you know, it's interesting. Here on the West Coast most of us have found a much better living in television work. The story editors are Eric DeWald and Mark Eden. They're probably best known for their work as story editors on BEETLEJUICE. I have to say they've done an amazing job in bringing this very complicated universe to life. They have thirteen episodes in which to compress about two hundred issues of comics material. The first two episodes are two-

by the name of Morph to the X-MEN show."

parters that introduce Jubilee to the X-Men and bring in the Sentinels. Episodes three and four are a Magneto storyline. Episode five will involve the Morlocks and then six focuses on Wolverine, after an incident in which he is rejected by Jean Grey. We'll be exploring the Cyclops/Jean Grey relationship. We'll also be dealing with the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse along with some other fairly involved storylines. We'll also be introducing a new character by the name of Morph. He's sort of like the Changeline except that DC already has the name trademarked. (Laughter.)

CHARLES: Will the Morph character then be appearing in the X-MEN comic?

WILL: I don't know for sure. There has been talk of an X-MEN comic based on the TV episodes.

CHARLES: If the series is picked up for another season, will the stories continue to tie in to the comic?

WILL: The plan right now is that if the series continues, the stories will move closer and closer to being in line with the comic. Obviously, some things will have to be handled a little differently for television. Death is a very touchy subject, as is dealing with sexual relationships. Barring the series bombing, Fox is planning the series to run as 65 half-hour episodes. Our intention is to do 13 episodes this year, 13 next year and then do the remaining 39.

CHARLES: That schedule isn't really typical of a series that might run on the other major networks, or is it?

WILL: No, not really. Fox has the advantage over the other networks because they have their Fox afternoon block. Normally, if you have a network show, it will get picked up for 13 half-hour episodes the first year. If the show is a success, then it's picked up for eight more episodes the following year, and eight the following year and so on. If the show is faltering they can pick up as few as four episodes. With Fox, their feeling is that if a show is successful on Saturday it can go to a daily show on their afternoon block.

CHARLES: Getting back to you personally, you worked in comics for some time?

WILL: Right. Mark Evanier and I worked on DNAGENTS for, like, two years. DNAGENTS was one of the first creator-owned comics.

CHARLES: Do you still read comics?

WILL: Sure! Not like I did when I was a kid, but Larry Houston and I, and a few of the producers from the BATMAN series, will go down to a comics shop at lunch time and browse through the comics. When DAK did his index in the 100th issue of COMICS INTERVIEW I was listed as an animator, but in my brain I still register as a comic-book artist rather than an animator — even though I've done about 300 or 400 half-hours of animation and maybe only 20 or 30 comics. As a child, I wanted to be a comic artist, and so I think that's why it still registers that way in my brain.

CHARLES: You've worked both in comics and in animation — any major similarities or differences?

WILL: Creatively I think comics are, in a way more satisfying, because you have fewer levels of editorial input. I find it interesting that when I'm doing one exclusively over the other I always miss the one I'm not doing. In live television stuff you get to work in real time and you get to direct real live actors. You also work for a much larger audience in television. If you worked for an audience of seven million for television you'd have a real bomb on your hands. Business-wise, it's still much easier to own characters of comic books than television characters. With comics, you draw it and then you're done. With television, it's a collaborative process where you work with literally hundreds of people to get the job done. I'd be hard pressed to say I liked one more than the other. There's something neat about seeing your name in print in a comic. On the other hand, there's something special about turning on your television and seeing your name on screen.

CHARLES: You've been in animation for quite some time now. Do you have some memorable projects that you worked on?

WILL: They were all fun. I started out doing storyboards and I produced the music videos for JEM; I worked on the original X-MEN pilot; GI JOE commercials; the first two seasons of GHOST BUSTERS; and CAPTAIN PLANET. I'm also working on the CONAN cartoon.

CHARLES: I'll have to admit that I've not heard about the CONAN cartoon.

WILL: Being a kid's show we obviously won't be getting into the raping, looting and pillaging. (More laughter.) Russ Heath is the art director and Russ and I did most of the models for the show.

CHARLES: Talking television, how do you feel about the new Bob Newhart show in which he plays a comic-book artist?

"The Newhar[illegible]'s going to be the Jack Kirby story."

WILL: I think it's fascinating. Mark Evanier is, of course, involved with the project and, at one time, we discussed the possibility of me being the comic-book artist.

CHARLES: I believe that job went to Paul Power?

WILL: Right, and Mark is writing it. I think the program is a great premise. My understanding of it is that it's going to be the Jack Kirby story.

CHARLES: That's interesting; I've not heard that! Getting back to the X-MEN series, a lot of readers are familiar with the time frames and constraints of producing a comic book; if the X-MEN series is due out in mid-October, where does that put it production-wise at this point?

WILL: In an animated production you start with a script. About a week after the scripts are turned in the model sheets are finished and then you hand it out for storyboards. At this point we just sent out the fifth storyboard for client comment. In terms of pre-production, the show's probably around a quarter of the way done. The nice thing about working with Fox is that the show was a late pick-up and Barbara gave us a few extra weeks because she wants to see it done right.

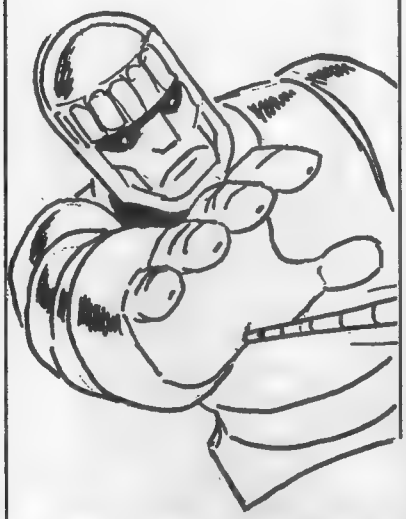
"I wanted to work on the X-MEN animated series."



A long-time comics fan, Larry Houston began his animation career with Filmation in 1979 and was involved with such animated features as TARZAN and FLASH GORDON. Shortly after the formation of Marvel Productions in 1980, Larry joined the staff and worked on basically all of their adventure animation shows; DUNGEONS AND DRAGONS, SPIDER-MAN AND HIS AMAZING FRIENDS, INHUMANOIDS, and SOLARMAN, to name but a few.

Larry left Marvel Productions to join GRAZ Entertainment and is currently the line producer for the X-MEN animated series premiering on Fox this fall. Now, let's join Larry for a fascinating discussion of the ins and outs of producing an animated series as complex as the X-MEN . . .

"We're not making changes just to make changes.

All art from Larry's storyboards for X-MEN show #1.

CHARLES NOVINSKIE: How did GRAZ Entertainment come about?

LARRY HOUSTON: What happened there was that the head of production for Marvel, Jim Graziano, left Marvel and started his own studio, GRAZ Entertainment. GRAZ had gained the rights to do the animated CONAN series along with MY LITTLE PONY. There was also the very likely possibility that GRAZ was going to be involved with the X-MEN series. I wanted nothing more than the chance to work on the X-MEN series, so when I heard that GRAZ was going to be involved I took a chance and made the move.

CHARLES: I take it from your comments that you're a big comics fan?

LARRY: Definitely. I started collecting way back when, back in the '60s when Stan Lee and Jack Kirby were producing the FANTASTIC FOUR. One of the earlier issues I remember was the Silver Surfer first appearing in the FANTASTIC FOUR. I've been reading and collecting ever since. I mostly buy books to read writers that entertain me and for the phenomenal artwork in the books. I also buy a lot of the X-MEN books, both because I enjoy the books and because I have to know what's going on with the X-MEN to produce the series.

CHARLES: As closely as you are following the comic plot-lines, I would guess that you have to keep in close touch with the writers or editors.

LARRY: I keep in constant contact with the editor of the X-MEN books, Bob Harras. Bob has been involved with all of the scripts, the voices, and the continuity. We're not making any arbitrary changes just to make changes. We're sticking as close to the continuity as we can and that requires constant contact with people such as Bob Harras. We can't do the series verbatim, because you can't include thirty years of history in a series of half-hour shows. When the Sentinels first appear they take on the X-Men. This is, as far as the show is concerned, the first time that the general public sees evidence that there are not only mutants, but that there are organized groups of mutants in the form of the X-Men. From that point on, in the television continuity, individual characters are introduced.

CHARLES: Will Meugniot mentioned the core group of characters. Who else will be featured in the show?

LARRY: We'll be introducing Colossus in one episode. We'll also be introducing Bishop and the Juggernaut. Wolverine will be the focus of one of the episodes where we will be able to concentrate on character development. There are so many X-Men out there that we decided it would be best to work on developing a specific core group. The further we get along in the show the more characters we'll be able to introduce. If you look at the core group of characters we have a nice balance of three women and three men.

CHARLES: You mention the involvement of Bob Harras. How much is Stan Lee involved?

LARRY: Stan Lee is very involved with the show. Stan goes over both the scripts and the storyboards and makes adjustments in the dialogue so that newcomers can follow the series. Stan fixed the dialogue and such so that — even if you haven't followed the history of the X-Men through their comic adventures — you can still follow the show.

CHARLES: Can you name some of the other creative talent involved in the series?

LARRY: Sure, the person doing all of the model sheets is Rick Hoberg. He should be familiar to comic fans. Rick was also one of the originals who worked with me on the first X-MEN pilot. Louis Williams is working on the models for the series. Louis was also involved with Marvel and did some issues of DAREDEVIL and MARVEL FANFARE.

CHARLES: Obviously, the people reading X-MEN comics will want to watch the show. I assume that the real success of the show will be drawing in new viewers and familiarizing them with the X-MEN. In turn, the show should create a whole new group of comic readers.

LARRY: That's one of the goals of the series; to reach a larger audience. Given the print success of the X-MEN comic book, it's still a very small part of the total population. By staying true to the comic, people who watch the show and

"With this X-MEN show we're doing a then pick up the comic won't be disappointed. We want to be true to the characterizations and dialogue of the characters. There was a movie version of THE PUNISHER in which they arbitrarily took it upon themselves to take out all of the things that made him the Punisher.

CHARLES: Like the skull on his chest?

LARRY: Exactly, and after they made all of the changes, one had to wonder why they did a film on the Punisher — when the final product wasn't the Punisher. You have to be faithful to the audience that is already familiar with the character and is expecting to see that character.

CHARLES: You also worked on the first X-MEN pilot. How does this differ?

LARRY: This one has a lot more going for it. With the first pilot our instructions were a lot different. The pilot was just that, a pilot. It was more of a promo trying to get people interested in the series so that we could do thirteen episodes. With the promo, we couldn't put in the dramatic resonance that we wanted to, because we were serving a different agenda. With this series we're doing a dramatic series — we're making good film. Having the comic-book continuity to draw upon is a bonus for the series. We have a lot of motivations and traits already developed in the comics which we can expand upon.

CHARLES: Obviously, there are a lot of different aspects to putting together an animated feature and one of those is the voice overs.

LARRY: There are quite a few different companies involved in the overall process. The voices are being done by a Canadian group, Sound Interchange. I went to Canada to supervise the recording and it was really fun meeting these people. The guy that does the Beast is this nice guy — but he's really huge, just like the Beast, and the voice that comes out of him is just so natural. The voices are fabulous! If you could just listen to the tapes of the show, the voices separate; if you had no video but just the sound track, you could still easily identify all of the characters by voice. That voice separation is exactly what you want since, to be quite honest, if you look at the drawings, it's not that easy to differentiate the characters — because everyone is huge, with muscular bodies. They have a lot of good talent in Canada. The lady that's doing the voice of Jubilee is the same lady that does the voice for the girl in BEETLEJUICE.

CHARLES: You scared me for a second. I thought you were going to say it was the lady that does the voice for Marge on THE SIMPSONS. (Laughter.)

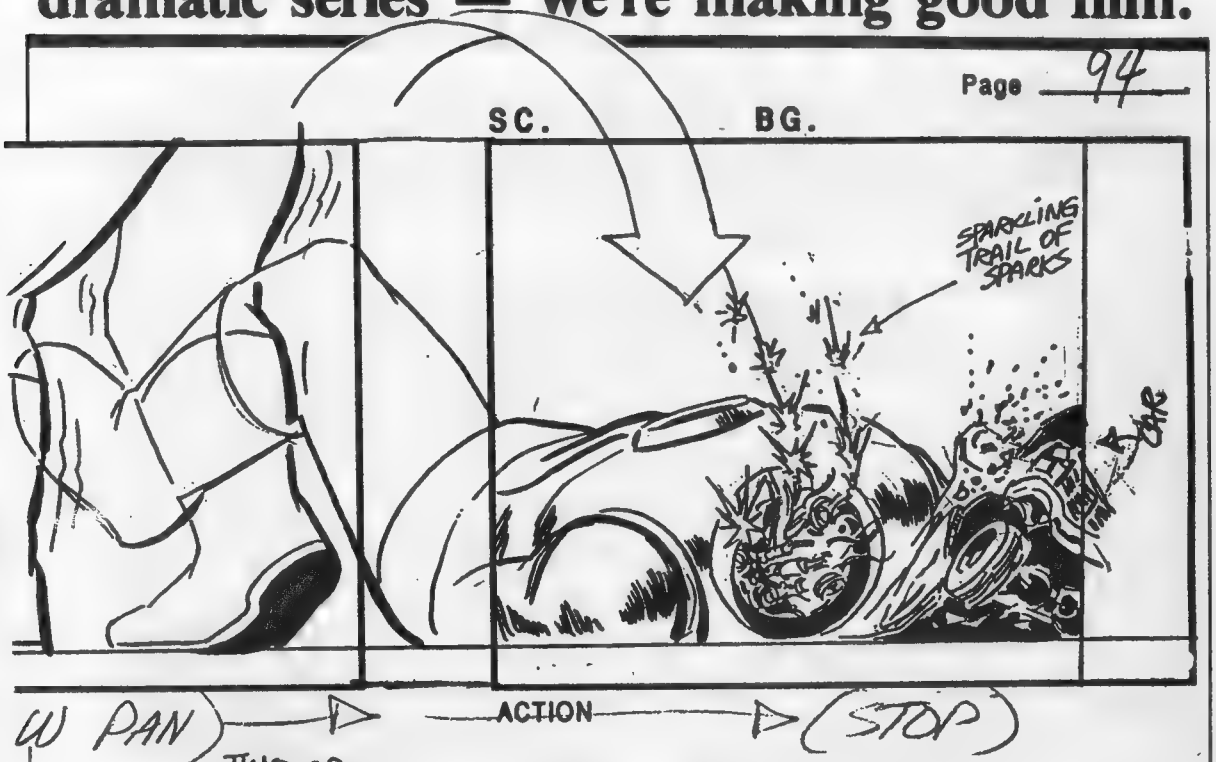
dramatic series — we're making good film."



LARRY: No, she's definitely out! The girl that does Rogue does a very sexy Rogue and, as it turns out, uses her natural voice. She even looks a little like Rogue, the kind of girl every guy would like to meet. (Laughter.)

CHARLES: What about Gambit? He has ties to New Orleans and has that Cajun sort of voice.

LARRY: We tried to give them all their own distinct voices. What we found is that exaggerating a Cajun accent would hinder the performance. There's a hint of it — but it's not overdone. Once again, we consulted people like Bob Harras and we all decided to tone down Gambit's speech patterns.

CHARLES: Will there be any computer-generated animation as opposed to the cel animation?

LARRY: We've talked about computer animation for the Blackbird jet and holographic imagery for the War Room. We'll also see the Danger Room — which will be going back to the original intent of having characters dodge obstacles and things like that to hone their skills. I've always looked at the Holodeck on STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION as their Danger Room. What we want to do is give fans the best of the best from the comic. We'll be having quite a few cameos of characters from the book, so that readers of the book will be able to say, "Hey, I recognize that character!" Each episode will stand on its own, but we will also have ongoing subplots so that each episode will be relevant to subsequent stories. The series should appeal to a wide group of viewers, whether or not they read comics.

BLOWOUT

1,000,000 BOOKS TO GO

LET THE SALES BEGIN

THE "KILLER" INSTANT INVENTORY!!

Not a mass not a zombie but an inventory not 1-50 of an issue not 1 20, not 1 10 not even 1-5, but an inventory most dealers don't see in a lifetime even if they have all the books. 52 long comic boxes in alphanumeric order, maximum 3 of an issue

That's over 19,000 books in order (that is more than 2 weeks of sorting work), no more than 3 of a number, about 45% Marvel, 40% DC, 15% Independents, 1975 up, VG-F or better mostly nice fans, GD+ at ~80

$8500 plus shipping

AND THAT'S NOT ALL!! Since not all books are created equal, we are adding
1) 2 boxes of 'X' & Mutant titles, such as X-Men, X-Factor, New Mutants, Excalibur, Alpha Flight, etc., no more than 3 of a number
2) 2 boxes of major Marvel titles to supplement what's already in the mass inventory: Spider-Man titles, Avengers, Capt. America, Daredevil, Fantastic Four Hulk, Iron Man, Thor.
3) 1 box of Batman & Detective i.e. 5 Death in the Family Sets (426-429)!!
4) 1 box with a minimum update value of $1000

THE WHOLE BIT $8500 plus shipping

That's 59 boxes with 20,700 + books

AND THAT'S STILL NOT ALL. We hate odd figures, so we'll throw in a box of miscellaneous whatevers (Harvey, Archie, etc.) to make it 60 BOXES & A GUARANTEED 21,000 + BOOKS OH HO! THERE'S MORE!! Once the deal is done & you've decided to keep it, send us a $1000 order (Maximum 5 of an issue) from our extensive wholesale lists, and we will fill out $500 of it, ABSOLUTELY FREE AND MORE!!! For the year following the deal, take 25% off of any order of your value you make from our wholesale lists (max. 5 of a number, maximum total orders $4000)
TIME NO FRILLS VERSION. The basic inventory of 19,000 + books in alphanumeric order

$8300 plus shipping

ATTENTION: There is quite one inventory of this description available at this time duplicates of variances can be assembled, but costs are likely to be higher

UNADVERTISED SPECIALS WILL ACCOMPANY ALL ORDERS

1ST ANNUAL CUSTOMER APPRECIATION SALE

Regular customers are the lifeblood of any mail order business. With "Avalanche" catalogue #47 (due on October 1st), we will be kicking off our 1st Annual Customer Appreciation sale. If you will have ordered from us 5 times or more between October 1, 1991 & Sept. 30, 1992, you will receive a special order form entitling you to a minimum 15% discount on any per 1 price throughout our catalogue (100 + pages). There will be no time limit on this offer. You will be limited only by the total value of books you have bought from us in the previous year. For example, if we've sent $480.00 worth of books, you will receive a 15% discount on your next $240.00 worth of orders. Exact terms are still being worked out, but discounts & order limits will increase with increased frequency & annual total of purchases. Maximum discount will be 25% on 1.25 x your annual purchases (10/1/91 9/30/92) Your personal discount and order limit will be indicated on your special order blank

Our determinations will be final. Discount applies to per one prices only, and will not be applicable to lots & collections

STICK WITH US. THIS IS ONLY THE BEGINNING.

THE ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER OF THE 1920'S JOE BONOMO

Hollywood stuntman & serials star

Joe Bonomo documented his fantastic career as a Hollywood stuntman extraordinaire & serial serials star in The Strongman an early (.968) coffee table photo bonanza that documents 1920's Hollywood with the same flourish that Bonomo displayed in his daredevil stunts. He covers it all from legendary epics like De Mille's Cleopatra (with Claudette Colbert) and The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Lon Chaney) to now lost films like Phantoms of the North (Boris Karloff) from Jungle Trails (he was contracted to play Tarzan but lost the part due to injury) to Western Trails (he was a mainstay in Western serials.

"BRITISH ANNUALS II"

(British Annuals list cat. pages 44-49 accompanies all orders.)

A British tradition that started in the 30's - large H/B books issued every year featuring fictional and real life idols of the pop cultural landscape: TV shows, movie & music stars, comic characters. All are extensively illustrated, many contain photos as well

Of particular interest are the great British artist/illustrators of the 50's & 60's like McLoughlin, Embleton, & Lawrence - Giants by any criteria - and their contemporaries, much of whose work deserves closer scrutiny

More familiar talents of recent vintage (Bolton, Gibson, Moore, etc.) make some of their earliest appearances here.

British publishers maintained a tradition largely abandoned by Western Publishing (Dell, Gold Key, Whitman).-When Western stopped its steady stream of comic adaptations of TV shows, British publishers continued with original material. We have tried to identify British originals as best we can British annuals created their own tradition- the illustrated text stories of everything from the A-Team to Zorro are 95% + British, never printed in the U.S.

P = puzzles & games, Q = quizzes, M = maps; G = gadgets, etc.

Due to lower British print runs, all annuals are scarce by U.S. standards

"From a television pilot BEBE'S KIDS

exploded into a feature from Paramount."

"We don't die, we multiply!" is the signature line of Bebe's kids, a misbehaving mischievous trio born spontaneously on stage by the late Robin Harris (Sweet Dick Willy in DO THE RIGHT THING) as a response to a heckler. They are also the title characters of the first animated feature film with exclusively African-American principals. BEBE'S KIDS has been described as a family film all ages should be able to enjoy, a positive black film that all people should be able to enjoy, and a labor of love . . .

DARREL L. BOATZ: I'm speaking with Bruce Smith, director of BEBE'S KIDS, which is going to be released — July 31, I believe?

BRUCE SMITH: That's correct.

DARREL: To jump right into it, I'll ask you to explain where these characters came from and how they came to be animated, the story behind the story.

BRUCE: Well, basically, BEBE'S KIDS is a sketch from the late comedian Robin Harris, so all these characters came from his imagination. The project was brought to the studio, at Hyperion, I'd say in the latter part of 1990, by the Hudlin Brothers. They had an idea about doing an animated TV pilot called BEBE'S KIDS because Robin had passed on early that year, I believe. Initially the project was going to be done in live action, but since his passing it was tailored for animation with a sort of SIMPSONS audience in mind. So, from there the project was, like I said, brought to Hyperion and we began developing the idea, keeping in mind what we wanted to put on the screen. For one thing we wanted to definitely have the Robin Harris feel to it, and have it also be very Afro-centric in its visuals.

With that idea in mind I began designing characters that fit around that whole concept, so eventually we sort of landed on ideas that we thought were definitely leaning in a positive direction. In the meantime NBC, which the project was with at one time, began to change regimes with Brandon Tartikoff leaving and going to Paramount. Since Hyperion had a three-picture deal with Paramount Brandon Tartikoff decided to bring BEBE'S KIDS with him, so from a television pilot it exploded into a feature, which ended up becoming the first feature out of the block at Hyperion from Paramount. That's basically the roots of it in a nutshell.

DARREL: Now, Robin Harris was a stand-up comedian. I really am not familiar with his work, unfortunately.

BRUCE: His stand-up comedy was very . . . what would be a good word for it . . . it was just very black, I guess. He grew up

VITAL STATISTICS

Name: Bruce Smith
Born: 6 September 1961 — Los Angeles
Occupation: Director/Animator
Education: I attended Cal-Arts, the California School of the Arts, in Valencia
Credits: (Animator) WHO FRAMED ROGER RABBIT?; TUMMY TROUBLE; (Directing Animator) ROCKADOODLE; (Directing Animator and Sequence Director) ROVER DANGERFIELD; I was also the key animator on the MICHAEL AND MICKEY and BACK TO NEVERLAND projects
Anecdote: Actually, I'm also in BACK TO NEVERLAND. I got to share some scenes with Walter Cronkite. That was fun. I played the animator. (Laughter.) It was funny because I went down to Florida to see it on the big screen and as soon as I came on my son was like, "It's Daddy!" So everybody turned and looked at me and said, "It is him!" (Laughter.)

"Animated films haven't been too kind to black

in Chicago, I believe, and the sense of humor sort of centered on being raised in the inner city. So the whole concept of BEBE'S KIDS sort of represents any bad kid. (Laughter.) Bebe is a character that we never really see on the screen nor did we ever see the character in Robin's skit. It's become very universal, I guess, underground.

The way the skit goes is that he's up late at night, you know, with his girlfriend, and his girlfriend happens to be baby-sitting Bebe's kids and they won't go to sleep. So, he's up all night trying to entertain his girlfriend while these kids are up all night entertaining him in a way that he doesn't want to be entertained. (Laughter.) So they sort of represent any bad kid. Right now in the neighborhoods, you know, every bad kid is sort of like Bebe's kids.

DARREL: I get the idea from the material I've read that "bad" is a subjective term here; we're talking mainly about kids that are kind of independent and choose their own fun rather than being directed and controlled. It's sort of that type of thing?

BRUCE: Yeah. What it comes down to is that these kids come from a dysfunctional background, basically, so they don't have the discipline that, you know, a kid from a two-parent home would have.

DARREL: What, essentially, is the story in the film?

BRUCE: The story is about Robin, who meets this girl that he really wants to get to know, and she's a single mom who has a kid who is a good kid and that's fine with Robin. That evening he makes plans to take her and her kid to an amusement park. The next day he shows up to take her to the park and she's got three more kids with her. (Laughter.) He's like, "Whose kids are these?" She's like, "These are Bebe's kids." So he's like, "Well, where's Bebe?" Well, Bebe went downtown and we come to find out that Bebe's a sort of somewhat neglectful mom and her kids are just plain bad.

So, when they get to the amusement park Robin's worst nightmares sort of come true, you know. They end up ripping the park up! (Laughter.) The park and the park characters and everything. Robin tries to get away from these kids and his whole plans are foiled. But in the end he sees why the kids are the way they are and in a lot of ways sort of becomes their surrogate father. Understanding their background he sort of fills in, so the story takes on the message of responsibility, basically — being responsible for the youth.

DARREL: When Gregg Brilliant at Paramount was first telling me about this project he mentioned that you were going to be avoiding any kind of racial stereotypes, that this was being focussed as a positive family picture, primarily for black families but one that any family from any background could enjoy as well.

BRUCE: Well, I think what this film showed in early screenings was that it's very real and that's why a lot of people appreciate it. And the other issue, as far as stereotypes, when I was designing these characters . . . you know, the history in animated films is they haven't people . . . You need balance — that's the key."

been too kind to black people, so I sort of had to take on the burden of how to design these characters without being very offensive and very stereotypical in my approach. The idea was that I wanted to design these characters so that when people look at these characters they have definite characteristics of being black but they also have characteristics of people that you know.

I sort of drew upon anybody and everybody that I knew, different age groups, took a little bit from everybody and made it so it's very familiar, so when you see these characters it's like, "I know this guy, I know that guy." As opposed to the typical, I guess, ideas of being black, I sort of took that and expanded on it. So, I think people will be pleased visually with what they see. And I think the story content is very real, once again, and very humorous. That was the tricky part but I think we really made that hurdle.

DARREL: That sounds great. I always enjoyed the Cosby characters, Fat Albert and that, but I also had kind of an uncomfortable feeling about the stereotypical stuff built into that. Should I enjoy that part of it or not; there was always kind of a queasiness on my part about that.

BRUCE: Yes. Well, it's sort of interesting because at the time something like that was very acceptable. I mean, I grew up in that era where I'm watching the show and I'm not offended at all, you know; I'm just grateful that black characters are on the screen!

DARREL: Right.

BRUCE: And what happens is something like that sort of comes to the point where it's dated. It's the same way with the black films of the '70s pretty much. A lot of people went to the films just sort of happy to see their own kind on celluloid, you know, and "We'll worry about the true sensibilities later." You sort of have this awakening after everything is done, but it was a breakthrough just to see yourself on the screen — thinking that later on we'll rectify the stereotypes. Well, later on didn't really happen.

DARREL: Yeah. And there were some good films in that era, like . . . what was that Flip Wilson and Bill Cosby picture?

BRUCE: Oh, yeah, UPTOWN SATURDAY NIGHT.

DARREL: Right! That one's a classic!

BRUCE: Yeah, that was really fun! There were a lot of good films in the '70s; what happened during that blacksploitation era was there just wasn't enough balance. That's basically what we need to focus on, you know what I mean. You look at a lot of black films today and you're going to have your drug dealers and gang members and stuff like that. But you need balance in that film, you need to see black people in the positive light. You need to see the good fathers and the people making honest livings, because those things are real! The drug dealer is real but the good father is real also. I think that's sort of the key to it all.

DARREL: Yeah. I saw NEW JACK CITY and, you know, whatever reality there was there, I didn't find a balance in that film.

BRUCE: Yeah, definitely. That's what you have to deal with. You have to have balance in a film. I know the director definitely tried to put a lot of cultures in the film and that helped balance it out, like he had an Asian as the handsome detective — something you don't really see, you know — and he had a black person also as a positive detective. But overall the film lacks balance in a lot of areas.

DARREL: One thing I was wondering about, as far as the stereotypes go, there are certain attitudes . . . well, some people tend to see what they want to see in whatever you're going to do. Can you get beyond that and reach the people that have racist tendencies, can you get them beyond that somehow? Do you have any ideas on that?

BRUCE: I'm missing the question.

DARREL: Okay. Well, to go to the extreme let's take a KKK type guy, he's going to see skin color and physical characteristics and probably won't look beyond that. Is there a way to reach into these people to get them to look beyond that?

BRUCE: Well, the thing is, since this is animation, it's very tricky, but it's a very

Robin is the star of BEBE'S KIDS.

"The film will appeal to the audience that fanciful medium also. There is the fantasy element, so I'm hoping that a lot of people will look beyond what's on the surface and really get into the fantasy element of having fun, because that's basically what this film is about. But, you know, you can't change some people. Some people will look at it and won't take it for what it is if it doesn't strike them immediately. You know, whatever it is on the surface, the first 15 minutes of the film gives you this, and if you're not into it . . . there are going to be a lot of people like that. Those who stick around are going to be into the film for its content and for its purpose.

DARREL: Right. You've got some interesting talent lined up for this project, like you have an impressive array of people providing voices.

BRUCE: Yeah.

DARREL: Nell Carter, Tone Loc, some others that people might recognize. Did you have any trouble getting who you wanted?

BRUCE: No. It was funny about that. When we began casting this film practically everybody who's black in Hollywood if they didn't get an audition call they were calling themselves personally saying they wanted to be a part of this. Everybody who knew Robin Harris and knew the act were really down with the project from day one, so we had a hard time picking who we were going to choose! It was a good thing we found a guy who really does Robin, that really helped the big problem. We were wondering, "Are we going to find a Robin?" But overall it was a hard time choosing who was going to do what.

DARREL: Well, better a wealth of riches . . .

BRUCE: Yeah. (Laughter.)

DARREL: Who all is working on the animation itself? Anybody that might be familiar at least —

BRUCE: I don't know. The thing about animation is it's so behind the scenes that no one really knows a Bruce Smith from a Bruce Johnson.

DARREL: Right, but people who are involved in animation are going to recognize —

BRUCE: They will definitely recognize some names, yes. We made it a point to have someone who had an eye for the ethnic values of the film. I sort of had a hard time, actually, getting animators to . . . not necessarily get enthused, but they knew that they were going to run into problems because they weren't of the same ethnic background as the film reflects. But once I got the guys into it they turned out to really shine. Lennie Graves, who I have been working with for the past seven or eight years, he did some work for Filmation, he's been at Disney — more recently at Disney he worked on BEAUTY AND THE BEAST and a MICKEY MOUSE short, THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER. I mean, not a mickey-mouse short but a MICKEY MOUSE short. (Laughter.)

DARREL: Right.

BRUCE: James Lopez is one of the younger, but definitely potent, animators around town. I had a lot of guys who had sort of been around; a lot of guys who hadn't been at Disney but had been working on projects of Disney quality: Steve Wahl, Steve Anderson, Ed Bell. Ed Bell helped design the film overall to get the sense of, I guess, the Afro-centricness of the film. Fred Cline and Doug Walker were basically the production designers on the film, and they helped carry through that whole idea of bringing the African look to the film.

We sort of base the look of the film on something you'd see from the Harlem Renaissance era, like the '20s. We based the whole design concept on the palettes that the African-American artists used of that day, so a lot of the colors reflect a certain African feel, especially when you're in the kids' neighborhood. Then what we do is when we go into the amusement park everything becomes very slick and very sort of standard issue as far as our color palette is concerned, and the way that we apply the paint to the surface. When we're in the L.A. area where the kids are from we didn't use the airbrush as much; you can visually see the brushstrokes and we allowed the brushstrokes to bleed from color to color. What it does is it sort of plays on your subconscious: When you're in L.A. you know you're in L.A. because of the way visually everything is presented on the screen, as opposed to when you're in Valencia or Anaheim where the amusement park is, there's a different texture.

DARREL: Now also, this is a musical comedy?

BRUCE: Oh, yeah, definitely! Music plays a big part in it. The kids do a couple of numbers in the film, a couple of rap numbers, and Robin also does a sort of blues "You Bedda Not Do Dis You Bedda Not Do Dat" song. (Laughter.) And then there's a love song between Robin and his girlfriend. So the music is intertwined well in the film. It doesn't necessarily stop the story to do a song and dance, it sort of keeps the story moving actually.

DARREL: Who's supplying the songs?

BRUCE: Our music supervisor, Bill Stepheny, helped get the soundtrack together, which included songs from Eric Sadler.

DARREL: A lot of upbeat stuff, I hope.

BRUCE: Yeah.

DARREL: Any stand-out potential big hits?

BRUCE: Well, there's the Tunnel of Love song except we don't know who's going to record it yet. It's a great song.

DARREL: Is there anything else you'd like to add in conclusion?

BRUCE: Well, overall I think that the audience that the film will appeal to is the type of audience that will want to see a lot more films that are not necessarily BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. The type of audience that have a yearning for, I guess, contemporary adult entertainment.

DARREL: By "adult" you mean not offensive to —

BRUCE: Not offensive and not condescending, also.

DARREL: 'Cause that word has a loaded meaning to it.

BRUCE: Yeah. (Laughter.) Kind of strange. And the thing is that animation is stuck with this sort of stigma of being definitely for kids, you know; regardless, it always has to have kid sensibilities.

I think this film plays at both levels. It plays at the children eight years and older, but it definitely plays for the adults also — which is the way animation was intended initially. Back in the early '20s a lot of the films were sort of tailored for both audiences, and that was even more reflected in the shorts of the '40s and '50s. The Tex Avery shorts and the BUGS BUNNY shorts at Warners were definitely tailored for an older audience, without being too over-the-top or risque or "adult" in its more contemporary sense, you know. Basically, this film is sort of a throwback to that sense of humor, and to that audience.

"I worked most of my career, since about 1952, at DC."

RAMONA FRADON

The most famous and popular career woman in comics turned 50 on June 30, 1990. Created in 1940 by the vivacious Dale Messick, Brenda has been a symbol of glamour and excitement for half a century. She is bright, beautiful, and a workaholic. Her career is of the utmost importance. She is in and out of adventures and love, but there is that special guy, Basil St. John!

When Dale Messick relinquished her authority over the strip in 1980 Ramona Fradon was picked as artistic successor. The talented Ms. Fradon has kept Brenda alive and current. Ever-changing, as is the world, Brenda Starr is still vibrant and beautifully rendered by Ms. Fradon and scripted by Mary Schmich . . .

R. ROBERT POLLAK: You've been on BRENDA STARR for about 10 years now. I'd like to go back to 1980 and find out how you were picked as a successor to Dale Messick. What was your background in the comics field?

RAMONA FRADON: I had worked for most of my career, since about 1952, at DC Comics.

"I did work for Marvel and others, but basically for DC."

ROBERT: What characters did you work on?

RAMONA: Over the years I probably drew most of them in one form or another. I did AQUAMAN for years . . . also PLASTIC MAN. I did the SUPER FRIENDS, which involved several of the major superheroes: Superman, Batman, Robin, Wonder Woman and various guest superheroes . . . THE FLASH . . . a lot of them. With George Kashdan (editor) and Bob Haney (writer) we originated METAMORPHO. That was my background. I did some work for Marvel and others, but basically for DC.

ROBERT: At that time artists didn't get credit or sign their work?

RAMONA: There wasn't that kind of individual attention in those days.

ROBERT: Were the people at Tribune Media Services Inc. looking for a woman cartoonist to continue the BRENDA STARR strip?

RAMONA: Yes, definitely . . . they were looking for a woman.

ROBERT: Was it difficult for the syndicate?

RAMONA: Yes. They looked for a long time because back then there weren't many women in the field. Aside from the underground comics, maybe only two of us were drawing at that time. They sent word out all over and caught up with me.

ROBERT: Is that the policy now on BRENDA STARR, to make certain that a woman will write and draw it?

RAMONA: I think they prefer that. I don't think they'd object to having an occasional inker being a male. Basically they want women. There's more women reading it too. So there's definitely a feminine slant to it.

ROBERT: I imagine you had to begin by working with Dale Messick on the strip. How did that go on?

RAMONA: She had always written and drawn her own material. She never bothered with scripts. She sent me pages of drawings instead of a script . . . all these roughed-out panels! It was very difficult actually to draw over her drawings. I began to lose my identity during that year. Then, when she stopped drawing I began to work from a script again. It was hard for me to overcome her layout ideas and her very powerful approach to drawing.

Panel from the present-day BRENDA STARR by Fradon & Schmich. Ms. Starr just celebrated her 50th.

ROBERT: So she would do the story in layout form and you would go over it?

RAMONA: That's what it ended up being really. Some of that work was really quite good. Her layouts were dynamic and interesting.

ROBERT: When Linda Sutter was writing the strip, the strip had Messick, Sutter, and Fradon on the credits. How did that work?

RAMONA: That was for appearance's sake. Dale had given up all control over the strip by then.

ROBERT: Was it hard to draw BRENDA STARR like Dale Messick did?

RAMONA: Dale managed to make Brenda a rather fascinating character in her own style of drawing. It didn't suit me. Dale was drawing her and she was expressing herself through Brenda. It didn't suit me to draw Brenda that way. I couldn't catch the quality that Dale caught. So eventually I moved away from it to a character I felt more comfortable with.

From 1956, a daily by series creator Dale Messick.

of tears in the year I drew with Dale. Now she rarely does."

ROBERT: Describe the difference in your art techniques.

RAMONA: Dale did a lot of texture. She used cross hatching and lines. Her figures drifted off into shading. It was a much looser, less tightly organized layout that she used also. She was more comic because her drawing as a whole reflected the more comic stories that she wrote. The writers I've been working with are less comic, so my drawing style is more in the romance comic style . . . more MARY WORTH's family style of drawing . . . more serious. It's not absolutely zany and off-the-wall as it used to be.

ROBERT: I remember you told me Brenda doesn't cry anymore. Over the years you've made the strip your own. What are some of the changes?

RAMONA: Brenda rarely cries anymore. She's more cool, a 1980s-'90s character now. Her response to every crisis was to cry. I drew thousands of tear drops in the year I drew with Dale. Now she rarely does. She's more of an appropriate character for the 1980s-'90s. Dale's character, fascinating as it was, was more vulnerable and always running fearfully from men. The current Brenda does the same. She runs from men in a cool, sophisticated way.

ROBERT: How has the strip remained the same and changed under Mary Schmich's pen and your brush?

RAMONA: The things I've already mentioned. The work is important to Brenda. It's the same. Basically she's a career woman and has trouble with her love life because of that.

ROBERT: Is she as glamorous now?

RAMONA: Dale had an incredible interest and flair for fashion. She said

Previous page: two examples of Sundays — again, from the team of Ramona and Mary. Here: Rare spot illustration by Ms. Starr's original conceiver, Dale Messick. (That's Basil on the right.)

"Advice to anyone going into cartooning: 'Learn to draw.'" once her Brenda was a paper doll and you could see that every day in the strip. She always had a new outfit on no matter what was going on in the strip. She has changed in that sense. I put more emphasis on Brenda herself whereas Dale put emphasis on what Brenda was wearing. Which, of course, was the essence of the strip. So that changed. When I started drawing it was before the Reagan era and the return to high fashion. Extravagance hadn't happened yet.

ROBERT: Do you suggest story lines to the authors?

RAMONA: Well, I do, but it's mostly in vain. Writers are writers you know!

ROBERT: That sounds like something Brenda would say! What's Basil St. John's role in the strip now? Still the heart throb?

RAMONA: As far as I'm concerned he's still the heart throb. I really like him the best. I like to draw him and I like his character. I think he'll always be back. They're married. Once you're married you're always married. He goes through confusion, but I think they're linked forever. That's just my feeling. I am guessing at this.

ROBERT: Any chance of special paper dolls being done, like in the old days, for children and collectors?

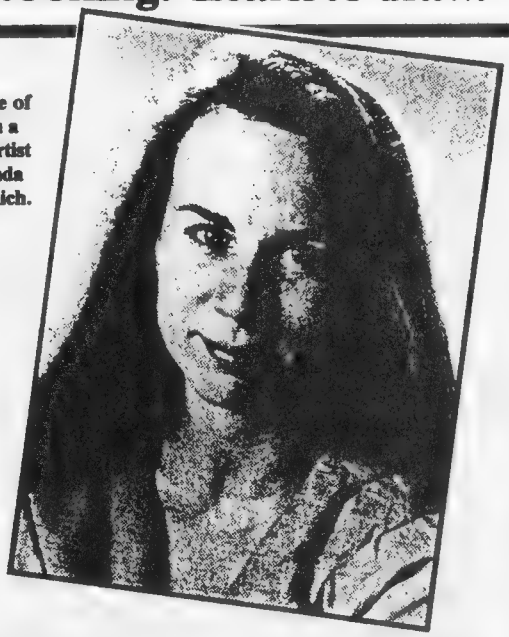
RAMONA: I spoke to my writer, Mary, about that after you mentioned it. It's a story strip that's continuing and it's difficult to get space, but she said she'd give it some thought if it could be worked into the strip.



Here: Well, on the first page of this interview we gave you a look at the series' current artist — here's a glimpse of Brenda Starr's scripter, Mary Schmich.

ROBERT: Do you see the strip continuing way into the 2000s?

RAMONA: I don't have a crystal ball. The story strips are struggling. Reproduction has gotten so small and story strips don't reproduce well. In this country their time seems to be running out. Overseas there seems to be a greater interest. For that reason it may keep going. Brenda has unique staying power. She is one of the few remaining . . . TRACY, ANNIE, and a handful of others. Brenda was the original liberated woman. She was the heroine to many women in the 1940s and '50s. Women readers do like Brenda. Newspapers are aware of the different groups they appeal to.

ROBERT: I've used BRENDA STARR as a learning tool over the last few years with 3rd, 4th and 5th graders. When I taught 5th grade, I had about 17 girls who loved BRENDA STARR. The boys liked it a lot, too! It's just a fun, interesting strip to read and look at. Any advice to young cartoonists and women in the field?

RAMONA: My advice to anyone going into cartooning is "Learn to draw!" Go to art school! Draw from a model! You can branch off. I see so many would-be cartoonists getting involved in ink techniques and drawing clothes. They can't draw. A lot of women in comics express an urge to humanize comics and get them out of a violent mode. I think and hope women would keep that in mind.

ROBERT: Make comics a kinder and gentler place?

RAMONA: Keep it a little rational. It's such an insane world! Also, some women cartoonists I've spoken to experience what they perceive as some kind of discrimination in comic books. I am not focusing on syndicated strips because it is so difficult to get a strip. I never experienced that myself. Whether it's true or not, I don't know. But my experience has been if you go in with something they want, they'll buy it!

FANTASTIC & BRILLIANT

Mr. Kraft:

I would like to thank you and Steve Bissette for the fantastic interview with the brilliant Dave Sim in #107. The sketches that accompanied the interview were an added treat. Thank you Dave, for allowing us to see them.

The article on letter hacking was great fun. It was also nice to put a face to a name. Thanks for the photo. Once again, thank you for a fantastic issue.

"FOR THE RECORD"

Dear Dave,

Compliments on COMICS INTERVIEW #107! I knew I'd enjoy Steve Bissette's chat with Dave Sim, but was worried that Steve's chat with Dave would overlap my AMAZING HEROES interview with Sim. To my great delight, the two conversations really complement each other. All the rare and sketchbook art you featured made INTERVIEW #107 a very special issue.

Then as the second interview, what's more appropriate than a panel of letter-hacks? That was a fun feature, sort of like an apa mailing in a way. There is one thing I wanted to mention "For the Record." I was the editor at AMAZING HEROES who hired Elizabeth Holden. As a reviewer, I was assistant editor during a transitional period, and took the responsibility upon myself to jettison some old reviewers and hire some new ones. Elizabeth was one of my new guys, along with two other people I knew from the world of apas. Tom Harrington, the editor who took over after my transitional work, chose her for the Marvel column. He couldn't've made a better choice!

My only quibble with this issue is that you never listed the address to send off for a copy of COMIC CRITICS CAVALCADE.

Thanks for the great issue!

A RUDE INTERRUPTION

Dear DAK;

I realize it's impolite to write a letter for publication in the same issue where the interview being commented on appears, but hey — I typeset this stuff. If you don't want me to read it before it's printed, you're going to have to pay for a bypass from my eyes to my fingers through the spinal chord, without going through my brain, and that'll cost big bucks, you betchum!

There you go with the superlatives again! In the introduction to the Bruce Smith interview, Darrel Boatz claims (or perhaps only repeats Smith's claim) that BEBE'S KIDS is "the first animated feature film with exclusively African-American principals."

'Tain't so, McGee! The first animated feature film with exclusively African-American principals is Ralph Bakshi's COONSKIN (1975), now available in home video under the title STREET FIGHT (and thank you, Jerry Beck, for putting that information in CBG at the exact moment I needed it). Now, it's true that a lot of people didn't like the depiction of black people in COONSKIN, but it was the first.

My memories of COONSKIN are fairly hazy, since I've seen scarcely a still from it since its initial release. But at the time, I thought those who objected to it were being overly touchy over the surface gloss, kind of like the idiots whose knee-jerk response to the word "nigger" in HUCKLEBERRY FINN gives literary analysis a bad name. Underneath, I thought, it actually seemed fairly sensitive and sympathetic. I remember Bakshi being bewildered by the response to it, and eventually reaching a point where he wouldn't allow it to be shown in public unless they also hired him as a speaker to explain why the initial response of many viewers was incorrect.

But I'm not prepared to defend that point of view, since, as I say, I haven't seen it since it first came out. Anyway, I'm not even black, so what do I know? Personally, I bristle at the slightest slur against Southerners, even though it's 15 years since I left the region of my birth, so I guess I can understand if some people's skin, whatever its color may be, is a little on the thin side.

Anyway, watch those superlatives, will ya?

BURROUGHS BULLETIN

Dear Darrel:

I just got COMICS INTERVIEW #109 today, and had to write to tell you how much I enjoyed it! You managed to make me sound interesting, in spite of myself!

The graphics are also very good. I look forward to seeing #110.

The 10th issue of BURROUGHS BULLETIN was sent off to the printer last month, and is still not ready . . . so I have time to catch up on some of my overdue correspondence. Gabe Essoe tells me that Wolf Larson (TV Tarzan) will have to be on location in Mexico at the time of the DUM-DUM next August, so I asked him to snare some other Tarzan actor to bring with him. He says he thinks he can get Ron Ely. That would be great! I also wrote to Frank & Ellie Frazetta and invited them as convention guests. I hope they can make it.

No other news at the moment. Thanks again for the spectacular interview, and best wishes!
